Tons of great scenery, good 'acting' by the bears (including Bart the Bear before his death), a bit of gore (bear killing dogs etc., might traumatize younger kids). Almost no human dialogue, which makes for nice nature sounds in the background. I felt a little misled by Amazon's labeling of this as released in 2015. It was actually filmed in 1988.

Jean-Jacques Annaud directed this unusual and compelling tale of animals in the wild, which tells its tale from the bears' point of view. A pair of carefully-trained bruins deliver remarkably effective "performances" (aided by clever editing and, in some sequences, the use of realistic animated models).

The Bear (1988) - Jean-Jacques Annaud | Synopsis ...

Everyone is familiar with the story of "Goldilocks and the Three Bears," but there's never been a follow-up that lets people know what happened after Goldilocks found the porridge that was just right. "Goldie and Bear" fixes that by reuniting the girl with Bear as they begin a new, unexpected friendship. Along with their friends and neighbors -- who are all taken from popular storybook tales ...
